THE SPEAKERS ON THE PANEL ARE

Claudia Luciani

Director for Democracy and Governance, Secretariat General of the Council of Europe

Frederick Richter

Executive director of the Federal Foundation for Data Protection, Germany

Friedhelm Frischenschlager

Former Minister of Defense and MEP, Austria

Péter Siklósi

Deputy-state secretary for defense policy, Hungary

Moderation: Blaž Golob, GoForeSight Institute, Slovenia

After a seemingly endless flow of revelations of privacy violations and intrusive activities from outside (and at times inside) the European Union, several responses are being discussed and/or implemented at the moment: A new European extra-territorial data protection regulation is forthcoming, Germany's leading Internet Service Providers implement national Internet routing, France and Germany call for a "European Internet", ... But how can such a "Europeanized" Internet work, what are the political, technical, legal and organizational challenges? And if it is feasible – is it also desirable or rather a detriment to economy and innovation? What are the repercussions on government infrastructure and digital services already in place?
